DEVELOPMENTS IN TIBETAN ETHNIC AREAS OUTSIDE TAR

Chinese President Xi Jinping on Qinghai tour

June 8, 2021

Chinese President Xi Jinping visited (June 7-9) Qinghai Province, a mineral-rich territory made up of most of the traditional Tibetan province of Amdo and the Yulshul part of historical Tibet's Kham Province. He visited a residential community in the provincial capital Xining "to learn about its efforts to strengthen Party building, improve community-level governance and advance ethnic unity and progress”. He called the province a ‘model of national unity’ and told local officials to uphold the party’s policies on governing Tibetan and other minority areas.

He highlighted the province’s importance for maintaining order in neighbouring Xinjiang and the Tibet Autonomous Region, and told local officials to adhere to Beijing’s ethnic policies and continue the ‘sinicization’ of religion. Xi Jinping also visited Kangtsa County of Haibei Prefecture, where most residents are ethnic Tibetans, and used the Tibetan greeting “Tashi Delek” to wish the locals luck. He also met some local families.

(Comment: The province is the birthplace of the Dalai Lama.)

Tibetan Private Language Schools Closed Down in Sichuan

June 3, 2021

Quoting sources Radio Free Asia (RFA - June 3) reported that authorities in Sichuan province are closing private Tibetan schools offering classes taught in the Tibetan language, forcing students to go instead to government-run schools where they will be taught in Chinese. The move is being pushed in the name of promoting uniformity in the use of textbooks and instructional materials.

RFA said a source in Sershul (in Chinese, Shiqu) county in the Kardze (Ganzi) Tibetan Autonomous Prefecture had said there were formerly many private schools in the Dzachukha region of Sichuan where the Tibetan language was taught. However, by the end of 2020, these schools were all forced to close down and the children forced to go to government-supervised schools. The parents of the affected children and other local Tibetans are deeply concerned over the imposition of this new law. They feel that young Tibetans are purposely being kept away from their culture and language.

A resident of Sershul’s Dza Wonpo township, the scene of frequent Tibetan protests against Chinese rule, said that life in the township remains tightly controlled, with the possession of photos of exiled Tibetan spiritual leader the Dalai Lama considered a serious offence. “Communicating with the Tibetan exile community has also become very difficult in recent times, and people will end up in prison if the Chinese authorities catch them doing this”.

While the China section of the Sichuan-Tibet Railway is already operational and the Tibet section will open this year, the third section that links China with occupied Tibet has proved to be a tough with existing technologies.

The report said the centre will promote major scientific and technological innovation and key technical solutions with a full-supply chain service system that includes big data intelligent support, inspection and testing, and consulting and training.

EU and US call China a systemic rival on human rights, Tibet

June 16, 2021

In a joint declaration at the end of a summit in Brussels on June 15, the European Union and the United States underlined their shared concerns about China's human rights violations in Tibet, Xinjiang and Hong Kong. While the EU was represented by the President of the European Council Charles Michel and the President of the European Commission Ursula von der Leyen, President Joe Biden represented the US.

The declaration spoke of "our respective similar multi-faceted approaches" to Beijing, which include "elements of cooperation, competition, and systemic rivalry." The International Campaign for Tibet (Washington - June 17) quoted Von der Leyen as saying at a press conference after the summit "When it comes to human rights and human dignity we are systemic rivals. We have to speak out on that and it is very clear that it is the main issue that divides us."

Exiled Tibetan MPs sworn in amid Political Controversy

June 16, 2021

During the oath-taking ceremony, 21 MPs took their oath of office from a temporary Speaker of the parliament while 22 took their oath before a portrait of Tibet's exiled spiritual leader the Dalai Lama and under the Tibetan Charter. All had been elected in the April 11 election held in Tibetan communities worldwide that saw former parliamentary speaker Penpa Tsering voted in as the political leader, or Sikyong, of the India-based Central Tibetan Administration (CTA) of the Tibet government-in-exile in Dharamsala. This group is still refusing to take its oath before the pro-tem speaker, Dawa Tsering, on the ground that Tsering had taken his oath of office before a formerly ousted Chief Justice which is unlawful.

Speaking on June 15 in an RFA TV talk show, Dawa Phunkyi -- a member representing Tibet's historical region of U-Tsang -- who took his oath before the pro-Term speaker Dawa Tsering said that a solution to what is now being called a constitutional crisis in the Tibetan exile community remains uncertain. Also speaking to RFA, newly elected MP Dorji Tsetan, who took his oath of office before the portrait of the Dalai Lama, called the current disagreements among the MPs typical of the controversies that can arise in functioning democracies.

On March 25, the government-in-exile's Chief Justice Minister Sonam Norbu Dagpo and two other justice commissioners, Karma Damdul and Tenzin Lungtok, were dismissed by the previous parliament following accusations that the trio had interfered in the internal proceedings of the legislature.

Tibet's new political leader, Penpa Tsering, replaced Lobsang Sangay, a Harvard-trained scholar of law, who had served two consecutive five-year terms as Sikyong, an office filled by candidates elected since 2011 by popular vote. The May 14, election results also named 45 members of the unicameral parliament-in-exile for its 17th session, with 10 candidates representing each of Tibet's three traditional provinces -- U-Tsang, Kham, and Amdo -- and two representatives from each of Tibet's four major schools of Buddhism and the pre-Buddhist Bon religion.
